Two Dollars

There were two dollars
They had a conversation
About their feelings
Ice Rink

Blades scraping on the ice,
Teachers giving students advice.
Little boys and girls twirling around,
To the jazzy, funky, and playful sound.
Kids performing tricks on the slippery surface,
And little Emma skates the furthest!
Skating, twisting, and turning about,
“2 more laps to go!” The instructor shouts.
Meanwhile on the other ice rink,
The sticks go: “clackety dink!”
The puck goes swirling around,
Bang! Crash! Number 76 topples down.
I am hardworking and determined.
I wonder when I will be at school again.
Playing football with my friends, in the blossoming park,
Or sledding down the hill, in the chilly winter.

I miss having lunch with my friends,
Deep in conversation.

I hear the insects chirp outside my room while studying.
I see my garden from my window and long to be at school.

Delicious meals of steak fill my mind as I dream of being at a restaurant.

I feel my book as I sit, reading endlessly.
I worry that quarantine will never end, lying down on my bed
After a day of hard work.

I dream of slicing the water when the pools open.
Free in the cool water, at last.
World of Light

Space glows like a firefly.
Sparkling stars shine and traverse through the tender universe.
It is a painting that can just hypnotize you.
   Reach for stars.
   Space is infinite.
The moon lights up like a lamp
   Its pure white gleams blinds you.
Space is breathtaking as the Milky Way leaves you with a face of surprise.
Sometimes, when you feel melancholy,
   all you have to do is look at the colors around you.
I Remember

I remember the hot concrete against my feet. The blue pool water splashing everywhere as I jumped in. When I walked out of the pool, the warm air turned into an icy breeze, slapping me in the face. I remember the juicy hamburger that I ate at a restaurant close to the beach. Its juiciness made me want to devour every last bite of it. We went to the gift shop and I saw the most beautiful bracelet. It had radiant round beads and glistening charms. Its colors were just like the cool and breezy beach everyone loves. The emerald green, dark blue, and sky blue.
We Shall Overcome

I stand there, next to the Washington monument. A giant obelisk, shining in the sun’s hopeful Light which peeks through the dark clouds. The voice of Martin Luther King Jr. rumbles through the audience. He inspires us by slicing the darkness using the blade of hope that he gives us. We will overcome the darkness not because we are strong and intelligent, not because we crush our enemies, but because we have hope and we befriend our enemies and help them see the light.

This poem was inspired by the painting We Shall Overcome by Lois Mailou Jones.
writing to reality
By: natasha stoper friedman

henry dumas, 1934 to 1968
age 33,
writes a letter to himself,
talks about
when he dies,
he wants to be remembered for his writing.

the circumstances are unclear
but but we know
we know that as he was walking through a turnstile,
a turnstile in a new york city train station,
his life ended.

how it happened
was shocking,
was disgusting,
fills people with rage,
with sympathy,
with frustration,
he was shot
by a new york city transit policeman.

afterward
his writer friends
at the party
toni morrison
threw for him
sitting and talking
about his achievements,
just as he wanted,
laughing and smiling
while crying
inside.
	hey were talking about his books which were
about racial tension,
about white supremacy,
even about science fiction,
they were talking about his life,
not his death.
Wind

Wind is the earth’s breath when it is lying down for sleep.
Wind sounds like nature’s whistle rippling through the forest.
Wind looks like an arrow splitting the air.
Wind remembers when the earth was forming, and the ground was rising.
Wind is a memory of a time when the earth was empty and covered with forests.
Girl

Some days, it can be nice to forget that I am here,
Too.
To mistake myself for what can be changed.

Girl is powdered sugar,
pixie sticks without tang, or,
even slight unpleasantness
of paper packaging left to dissolve on the tongue.

I am told:
Girl sheds. Shedding, peeling, sticky
paper layer,

Nuisance.

Wonder why
I have never really been able to get rid of the tang,
or the paper, or whatever turns mouths blue.

I imagine this longing of girl lingering. And the music—
Kim Deal’s voice like smoke on lemon,
dancing, rosy cheeked,
sunlight humming on skin.
These things are loyal--

Never to let hair fall loose out of pig tails, even when skin folds into prune.

This, I forget, is also the skin of a girl.
An extension.

It can be nice to remember that I am there,
Too.
Climbing Trees

“The tree’s were always permanent. They were access to the aether, but still deeply rooted in the ground.”
—Brit Marling

A place forgotten. Memories shattered like glass, cutting through thin-skinned hands that scrape this sidewalk on a street I know I will leave.

I asked my father for climbing trees every time we moved. Trees where my small feet can push off the dry moss and fly like dust, becoming one with this streaming air I breathe.

Trees where I can climb to the top and feel held by these solid branches.

Trees where I inhale the divine wind that's given to me by the aether, and I still feel grounded through these roots.

Trees that can still stand tall in my mind despite the chaos of a scattered assortment of recollection.

And I can remember a split second where I felt cosmic.
you don’t need a body to bury something

I.
i like to picture that eternity is the absence of some people say it wears the face of death bloody and devouring; neverending maybe that’s why grief is so daunting
the concept of loss in five stages never done for once always repeated in rebirth and recycle eternity in grief and loving people that no longer know it love isn’t supposed to be a finite resource
I guess that’s why it’s so caught up in death.

II.
the sun is forgiving, honey sweet, almost golden snow blankets in powdery layers
(I wonder if the ash of Pompeii looked like this when it buried bodies.)
grief slips into cracks and widens them in chasms.
the clock does not stop ticking.

III.
life goes on, after a newspaper obituary,
or as close to one there is these days
they only gain passing sympathy from a silent stranger
there is loss in that too.
maybe there’s a funeral some lost summer day—

IV.
death does not chase after bodies
I suppose it’s strange anyways, the idea of a coffin
who would’ve of thought:
another box to fit in.

V.
mourn too, beyond a graveyard
I am mourning every time I gaze into a mirror childhood has always been less of a skin to shed and more of something to bury.
They say
To seize the day
For the time will pass regardless
And you choose how you use it
Is the answer to lay around and sit Playing digital games and watching Netflix
Or is there something more important in life
Than GTA and stabbing someone’s avatar with a knife
Reload, reset, enter game
These words mark a new start
Another chance for users to play the part
But life has no controller
What is done is done the past has passed
Every day waking up is a miracle that is never guaranteed to last
They fear that an unlived life is more terrifying than death itself
Just another deficient fifteen-page novel lying on a shelf
They are wise
For your troubles are troubles which dying men yearn for Your exploits are birthed from choices you deplore
Regrets stand by faulty actions you have made
Yet acting was not the fault which causes the dismay
So before you need be reminded of why you shan’t delay
Do as they say
Seize the day
My Name is Madison and Yours Probably Is Too

My name is Madison,
bet you haven’t heard that one before.
Madison means “son of Matthew”
when really it should mean “daughter of everyone”.
So what’s it mean to be named Madison on the off chance that you’re not?

It means that you know at least six other people who share your name and you are probably friends with three of them.
It means never turning around when your name is called because you know you’re not popular enough for them to actually mean you.
It means hearing someone ask “Which Madison?” and hearing someone else answer “The blond one”.
And as if it couldn’t get any worse, they still don’t know which one.
It means searching for what makes you stand out a lot earlier than everyone else as you automatically lack the uniqueness many are born with.
It means a sub asks the class if all the Madisons are here and just like that you become a group instead of a person.

So, would I change my name, my first form of identity?
No, I would not.
I am not basic even though my name may be.
I may have been forced into a group, but aren’t we all?
Changing my name won’t change me.
So, to all you Madisons out there (and there certainly are a lot), you are not basic just because your name is.
Next time you find yourself trapped in the prison that is your identity, Remember that the cage that confines us does not define us.
We are what makes us feel free.
Bastards:

My sentences are children.
Tiny, helpless,
Little bastards
Whose fathers I never met.

I get around with verbs
Sleep with nouns, adjectives.
Linguistic slut.
Never the same one.

I carry my sentences in my skull.
Nowhere near soft, there.
Calcified cranium.
They find no comfort, no warmth.

I do not love all of my children.
Some disappoint
Hopeless infants
Sown by bum fathers; sloth begets sloth.

Some cave under the pressure.
I demand perfection; accept nothing less.
Impossible standards.
I am not a kind mother.
She's flying solo

feet don't stop for nobody free the mind from this xanax bared cell to fall is to drown in a promethazine pool of bitterness turn around... you forgot your baby's father

he's too deep
he's drowning
you can't bare to leave him so you drown with him
you found someone your feet are worth stopping for

why can't you stop for yourself
you can't find anything to love
look harder

why can other people see your beauty but you can't be okay with being alone
be okay with yourself... but how where do I start when I can't escape this cell
free me from my mind
no
free yourself
or don't even hell gets comfortable..
